ABSTRACT

This research aimed to study and analyze the policy implementation of local government, and to propose a properly administrative guideline for the local government to see to the aging-society preparation. The research adopted a qualitative methodology. The populations of research were conducted with three main groups of participants who were policy planners such as the executive officers of the local government, implementers including officers and staff, the elderly around Rangsit City Municipality, Pathum Thani Municipality, and Rahang Municipality, Patum Thani Province

The result of the research showed that the local governments had followed the national policy and the guidelines from the central government and the implementation for the participants were similar to one another as per the rules in the bureaucratic system. However, the elderly had more the additional suggestions that the local government should allocate more resources for improving life quality of the elderly. In addition, all increased resources should be used to enhance and patronize the elderly in term of association to be a center for participative actions.
